Elk Creek Items

The people of Elk creek thoroughly enjoyed the sunshine Christmas. There were several socials here during the week. The school at Taylor closed on December 23rd for a week's holiday. A candy pulling was given by Mrs. Wyatt in honor of her pupils. Several visitors were present. It was one of the sweetest meetings ever given on the creek.

Mrs. Wyatt spent a few days with friends in Mangum during the holidays.

Mr. A.L. Taylor attended the Masonic supper at Mangum on the 27th accompanied by his daughter Myrtle and Miss Kate Jones.

W.J. Miller, the Sweetwater stockman whom everybody knows, has been here some two weeks under medical treatment, and the doctors have now decided to take him to Kansas City where an investigation will be made by the aid of Roentgen rays to locate an arrow head which is supposed to have been lodging in his breast since 1869.

Mr. Miller is a typical westerner having lived on the frontier since boyhood. Large in size and jolly in disposition, no one would guess on seeing him that he has passed through experiences calculated to make a man look old before his time, but in fact, Mr. Miller looks ten years younger than the average man of his age notwithstanding several deep cuts on his face and neck left by arrow wounds.

FAVORITE SALOON
Stahl and Reed, Proprietors.

In September, 1869, he, in company with a man named Wash Morrow, were returning from mill in a four-horse wagon near the line of San Saba and McCullough counties, Texas, when a band of twelve Indians, driving stolen horses, came upon them. Both Miller and his companion had a pistol each, and as the Indians commenced circling and shooting arrows at them, Miller, who was driving, fired two shots at them. This frightened the team which ran away over very rough ground. To enable him to drive better Miller had to put his pistol under his thigh on the wagon seat and from there it was jolted to the ground and lost.

After running about three miles the horses dumped the wagon into a gulch, and before the two men had recovered from the shock the Indians cut loose the two lead horses and drove them off.

Both men were terribly wounded by this time, Miller having no less twenty-seven arrow wounds, seven of which were in the head, face and neck, whilst Morrow had fourteen.

Morrow's pistol was an old cap-and-ball and he had but one load, but with this he managed to scare the Indians back whilst Miller got the wheel hoses loose. Then both men mounted and made their dash for liberty. They had run but a short distance when Morrow's horse was killed, throwing its rider heavily to the ground. Miller stopped and helped his companion on behind him and they made another ride of about two miles when loss of blood caused Miller to faint and fall to the ground. Morrow staid {sic} with him and the Indians again closed around them, but at a distance.

Morrow turned the horse loose and drove it away in the hope that the Indians would be satisfied if they got all of the stock.

This hope was realized. After securing the horse and holding a short consultation, the Indians rode off, evidently thinking that the men were still armed and that they had decided to sell their lives as dearly as possible.

The above happened early in the morning. All that day and the following night the wounded men lay where they fell, burning with thirst and racked with pain, but too weak to help themselves although in plain hearing of the rushing waters of the San Saba river.

The following morning Morrow, refreshed somewhat by the keen night air, started to fetch Miller some water in his boot, but Miller crawled after him and got there almost as soon as he did.

Thoroughly refreshing and resting themselves the wounded men finally started for home which they safely reached after suffering untold agony.

Most of the arrows had been jerked out by the sufferers during the fight but some were taken out after they reached home.

Ever since that terrible experience Mr. Miller has suffered at intervals with hemorrhage, and it was an attack of that character which brought him to Cheyenne for medical aid.

In pulling out one of the arrows from his breast, Mr. Miller thinks that the head caught against the inside of his ribs and that he pulled out the shaft leaving the head imbedded in his lung.

It is to locate the arrow-head that the Roentgen rays will be used.

Seven years after the fight Mr. Miller had an iron arrow point cut out of his right thigh, and he believes that the removal of the one from his breast will lead to his entire recovery. The Sunbeam hopes that it may.

The Newman examining trial was held Thursday and Friday last. The territory only proceeded far enough with the testimony to justify the holding of defendant in the custody of the law. The defense to all practical purposes rested. Since the trial more evidence has developed. A search warrant was sent to Cheyenne to discover some of the missing effects which were known to have belonged to the deceased White. The searchers found not only the chattels desired, but also other blood stained quilts, and that the wagon in which White is supposed to have been hauled, to be saturated in blood. Another search warrant has been issued which is expected to still further develop matters.—Mangum Star

At 4 o'clock Sunday morning the thermometer registered 25 degrees below zero in this town. For at least a month previous to that date the zero point had been reached nightly. Notwithstanding this unusually severe weather losses of stock have been confined principally to those brought here late in the fall and to young calves, all of which proves that this is a remarkably fine cattle country.

Measles are now epidemic throughout Oklahoma, Roger Mills County included.

What may prove a fatal accident occurred at the home of A.E. Dawson a few miles out in the country, on Tuesday forenoon of this week. It seems that someone had left a loaded pistol lying in a chair and in passing by one chair Mrs. Dawson's dress or apron is supposed to have pulled the pistol off the chair on to the floor, or turned the chair over, caused the pistol to fire. The ball, of 45 caliber size, after passing through the bottom of the chair, also passed through Mrs. Dawson's infant's foot and then entered Mrs. Dawson's limb lodged in the flesh below the knee. Dr. Reynolds and Farber were hurriedly called, the painful injuries carefully dressed and at last accounts the mother and child were reported to be doing quite well, with prospects of complete recovery soon.

A Dastardly Crime

Last Friday night the most dastardly attempt at assassination ever recorded in this part of the territory occurred on Starvation creek. E.R. Smith, a farmer living in that community with his wife and children, was called to by someone outside his dugout who said they wanted to be directed to Mr. Eisler's, a neighbor of Smith's. Smith told him to come in. The stranger replied that he did not want to, but said he would like to get a drink of water. Smith had just retired for the night but got up and lit a lamp that was standing near. As the light was struck, the assassin who had come to the door, fired, the ball striking its victim in the upper portion of the left breast and coming out behind the arm. Smith fell, calling on his brother, who had just arrived from Fort Worth, to get a gun. After firing, the assassin ran off, leaving his victim lying on the floor weltering in his blood. The wounded man's brother was immediately sent for help, but being a stranger he got lost and wandered all night before getting word to town.

To Sheriff Thompson and other witnesses Smith said that he recognized the voice of his assailant when he first called out and that just as the shot was fired he saw the face. The wife and children who were in an adjoining room also say they knew the man who was talking. This evidence led to the arrest of a neighbor named Wilms, who waived examination and

Educational Notes

The county normal will be held this year during the month of July. A first-class man will conduct it. It is hoped that the teachers of the county will take notice and make their arrangements to attend. The day of the second and third grade teachers has about passed in the country. Wide-awake, first-grade instructors are in demand and there is no reason, with the facilities we enjoy for informing ourselves, why we should not all put ourselves in the front rank.

Miss Ruth Fields has closed her school at Custer Bend. She taught an eight month's term for the people of that district. She is an up-to-date teacher and deserves all the praise the Custer Bend folks are so freely bestowing.

Prof. Wilkins, of Tennessee, has been employed to teach the Timber Creek School. He comes well recommended.

Mrs. McCarthy is teaching the school on Buffalo.

Measles is interfering seriously with some of the schools of the county.

We should like to see a large number of public school students come in and take the examination on the 6th and 7th of April. Come along and test your knowledge of the branches mentioned.

Prof Henson, who is now in college at Fort Worth, Texas, will probably return to this county in the near future. It was his intention to abandon the profession of teaching, but he had the misfortune to have his money stolen from him on his return home, hence his determination to re-engage in teaching.

Ex-Superintendent Della Cann of Day County is visiting friends in town.

Miss Ruth Fields, we are informed, will leave in a few days to visit her home in Texas, but will return in time to attend the county normal.

Prof Osborn's school having closed the professor has moved his family out to the ranch. His work in Cheyenne has given much satisfaction.

Miss Kittie Fullerton is teaching the Timber creek school. Prof Wilkins, whom the board first engaged, returned to Tennessee.

Mrs. Wyatt abandoned her school at the Taylor school house on account of her health. She has gone to Tennessee to recuperate.

At first it was thought his injuries would prove fatal but we are glad to learn he is now doing well.

Dr. O.C. Newman and Fred Moss drove across the river Friday night to help fight fire. Just as they drove near the fire which was burning in tall grass the wind changed suddenly and brought the fire to them. They turned their horses and laid whip for the river and had a narrow escape. The fire was close enough to scorch them where they plunged into the river. They were a fine looking pair when they came across all covered with mud but feeling thankful they escaped the leaping flames.

The territorial superintendent's biennial report shows that the number of teachers employed for the year ending June 30, 1898, was 2,107, and that the total amount of teachers' wages was $291,052. People who think teachers receive too much for their work should study these figures. They show that the average wages of each teacher was less than $140. Taking the teachers of the territory as a whole, considering the expenses which they must necessarily incur, we find that they are not as well paid as the ordinary day laborer.

Near Fatal Shooting

What came near being a fatal shooting scrape occurred near Cordell on Friday night of last week. H.E. Mott, a prominent Cordell merchant had a horse missing and learning that it had been seen on or near the premises of Tom Smith, a short distance south of town, he sent for an officer, but fearing that the horse might disappear again, he got some other men to go with him and went to the place without waiting for Deputy Coe. Directly after reaching the premises the discharge of a gun inside came crashing through the wall or roof of the dugout throwing splinters uncomfortably near the neck and shoulders of one of the men, who— it being dark—was not seen by his companions again. Shortly afterward and further from the horse Mr. Mott came upon a man, he did not know whom in the darkness; he hailed him and not knowing but what one man had already been killed, and believing, from the action of the man that his own life

Sheriff Morrison and two deputies of Washita County were here Wednesday for a man named Sid Davidson, who killed Deputy Sheriff Singletary at Combs, Washita County last Saturday. It appears that Davidson and others were creating a disturbance by fighting and flourishing a gun. Deputy Singletary was sent for, and on his arrival he approached Davidson, saying, "Sid, I hear you have a gun. You must give it to me," at the same time laying his right hand on Davidson's shoulder. The latter replied: "What authority have you to take my gun?" The officer said: "That's all right; give me that gun," and as he spoke he reached with his left hand to take it from Davidson. The latter jerked loose, drew his pistol and instantly shot Singletary over the right eye. The officer fell to the ground dead, and the murderer escaped. A very sad accident occurred at the home of R.E Williams, about 4 miles southeast of town on last Monday. A grown daughter, Miss Eva Williams, who was subject to epileptic fits had wandered from the house, fallen in a pond of water and when found was past resuscitation although a physician was sent for and everything did to save her life that could be done. The young lady was a niece of our townsman David Smith.

A German family named Teason, living a few miles northeast of town, met with an unfortunate accident on last Monday. A grown daughter, Miss Katie Teason, while pulling burning embers from a dutch oven accidentally set her dress on fire, and we are told that her clothes were burned off her. Her mother got her hands badly burned in an effort to quell the flames, but they were not extinguished until the girl pulled loose and ran D.W. Tracy, who has just returned for a trip to El Reno, says that a man named Doc Ashby killed Dr. Griffiths, a druggist of Weatherford O.T. about 11 o'clock last Wednesday night by stabbing him in the left groin.

MANSLAUGHTER, Is the Verdict in the Y Cross Camp Shooting

On Saturday evening last Mr. E.F. Herring and Mr. W.M. Creagor came to town and informed Sheriff Thompson that a shooting had taken place at the Y Cross camp on the Washita in which they had participated. Mr. Herring also engaged Dr. Johnson to proceed at once to attend Cal Rowland, the man whom he said he had shot. Mr. Herring did not think at that time the Rowland was mortally wounded, but expressed the opinion that the wounds were probably dangerous.

Officers immediately went to the scene of trouble, which is some twelve miles from town, and on their return both Herring and Creagor were taken before Judge Osborn and bound over in the sum of $2000 each to await further action in the event of the death of the injured man.

The following morning, Sunday, the injured man, Cal Rowland, died and Herring and Creagor were placed in jail by Sheriff Thompson.

Senator Houston, J.W. McMurtry and J.B. Harrison appeared for the defense, whilst J.A. Powers, J.C. McKnight, and E.E. Tracy assisted County Attorney Burleson in the prosecution.

The first evidence offered was the deposition of the deceased, which was as follows: I am positive Creagor shot first, shooting me in the shoulder, my back being turned to Creagor at the time he shot me.

Herring told Creagor to shoot me, he, Creagor, shooting me before I had my pistol drawn. Creagor and myself had never had trouble always being on friendly terms. Creagor also shooting me the second time, my back being turned. He shot me through the hip. Herring emptying his pistol then got Creagor's but was stopped by Chas Powell.

The prosecution then called Arch Crowder, who testified as follows: The first thing I saw Rowland walk up to Herring, who was lying down on his slicker, and handed him a book, saying "Mr. Herring, this is what you owe me. I want you to pay me too." Mr. Herring took the book, rising as he took it. Rowland told him not to touch his gun, if he did, he'd kill him. They then cursed each other. I turned away and got a sack of sugar from the dugout and as I returned I heard Mr. Herring say something. Looking back I saw Creagor leveling his gun firing as he rose to his feet. He fired twice. I ran away. As I came back I saw Creagor run between two trees with his gun leveled and he fired again. Rowland fell. As he fell Mr. Herring fired the last shot. Herring then took Creagor's gun, when they ran in and stopped him.

In his cross-examination witness said: Creagor was sitting down back of Rowland about 15 feet when firing began. Creagor was on his feet when he fired the second shot. I did not see him shoot the third shot. He was about twelve feet from Rowland when the second shot was fired. I was about 10 feet from Rowland and Herring when the former went up to Herring. Rowland approached Herring from the back and right side. Mr. Herring said to him "You have the advantage of me. I can't do anything. Rowland told Herring that if he drew his gun he'd kill him. Rowland did some shooting. I can't tell how many times he shot at Mr. Herring. I saw Herring shoot but once. The dugout referred to was about 40 yards from the row. I don't believe I can recall the cursing. The first I heard was Rowland calling Herring a black son of b---h, and that he had acted as a rascal. Mr. Herring said, "if you'll throw up your gun I can whip the hell out of you." Rowland fired his first shot at Mr. Herring after Creagor fired. There was not a moment between the shots. I saw Rowland's pistol before I saw any other. It was in the waistband of his pants. I saw him pull it. Rowland was, I might say, standing over Herring when Creagor fired his first shot at him. Mr. Herring was down on his knees when Rowland fired at him. Rowland did not have his gun out when Creagor fired. The entire shooting from first to last did not take more than a second or two. It was only about half a second from Creagor's first shot till Mr. Rowland fired. Mr. Herring drew his pistol after deceased drew his. I did not see Herring have a pistol before Rowland shot at him. I saw him with one as deceased was falling, firing toward him.

Dr. J.M. Johnson testified that he had examined deceased and found three wounds, one being a flesh wound, the other two mortal. One of the latter entered the right shoulder and came out to the left of left nipple. The other mortal wound entered in front and came out behind.

S.R. Bean testified: I only saw the first shot. I was scared and did not want to stay. Mr. Creagor shot that shot at Rowland who was abusing Herring. Rowland had his hand on his six shooter before the first shot was fired. I was lying on the same slicker as Mr. Herring talking with him when Rowland approached in an angry manner with his hand on his gun before I saw Mr. Creagor's gun. I left because I did not want to get into trouble. Rowland's manner convinced me that trouble was coming. I never saw Mr. Herring attempt to draw his gun.

Mr. Elsie testified: I saw Rowland approach Mr. Herring and hand him a book saying, "I want you to pay me." Herring said "Well," and raised on his hand. Rowland said, "Don't do that or I'll shoot you sure as hell." Herring said, "You have the advantage of me." Rowland replied that he knew Herring and that he'd use an advantage if he had it. Creagor was sitting fifteen feet away. I heard him say, "Look out," or "Get out of the way." I saw Creagor with a gun in his hand and saw him fire at Rowland. Rowland had not drawn his gun at that time. As the shot was fired Herring and Rowland fired at each other almost simultaneously, Mr. Herring made a remark to Creagor just before Creagor shot. He was sitting down at the time of the remark. I saw Herring fire three shots. Bob Bean was the nearest man to Herring and Rowland. Rowland called Herring a d---n son of a b---h. Mr. Rowland commenced the abuse. I first saw Rowland's pistol. Rowland's and Herring's pistols were both empty after the firing ceased.

J.H. Turbeville testified: The shooting was all done in a few moments. Rowland had just fired a shot at Herring when Creagor shot. I saw Creagor shoot but once. I saw Herring shoot at Rowland four or five times. I called to Creagor not to shoot. I was sitting with my back to them. When I got up and looked around Herring and Rowland were firing at each other. I could not tell who fired the first shot.

W. Brown: I don't know who killed Rowland. Mr. Rowland had his hand on his pistol when he handed Herring the book. Mr. Herring said, "You are taking advantage of me." Rowland replied, "That's no more than you'd do." Mr. Herring looked toward Creagor when he drew down on Rowland, saying, "Look out." I turned, and pistol was fired. The first pistol I saw was Mr. Rowland's.

The Greer County Sun prints the following from its Navajoe correspondent:

Mr. F.E. Herring one of Greer's pioneer citizens has moved to Cheyenne City in Roger Mills County. Mr. Herring settled here with his family in 1887, though he had his cattle interest here several years prior to this date and while being strictly a cattleman he did not let his home and farm interest suffer and made one of the best homes in the county. A year or two ago for want of more range for his stock he leased land and moved his stock to Roger Mills County and being needed to supervise the ranch he decided to move, and Greer County in general and Navajoe in particular loses one of her most energetic citizens. He is liberal in his views, honest in his dealings and firm in his convictions. Greer's loss is Roger Mills gain, and while Mr. Herring always stood ready to respond to the acts of charity which has endeared him to the hearts of many, yet his energy and untiring efforts in the cause of education is where our heaviest loss falls, for Mr. Herring has done more to advance the cause of education both in time and money than any other man in our county, and as chairman of the Navajoe school board we lose a worker who will not soon be replaced. A few years ago in Greer's gloomiest days when famine was staring so many men who are prosperous today would have had to leave had it not been for the aid of Mr. Herring, the writer being amongst the number; and many will miss Mrs. Herring especially the sick and suffering, for none are more ready and willing to go to the aid of those in distress than she, and her presence at the bedside of the sick is like sunshine after a storm and the writer and family will not forget that in our darkest hour when sickness came and death called away the loving wife and mother it was then that the noblest element of divine nature became so apparent, for Mrs. Herring administered to the wants of the suffering to the end with a loving kindness and care that is seldom witnessed. Heaven bless their children. Long will they be missed by their Navajoe schoolmates. May success crown him, and his, is the wish of J.M. Ferris, And Many Others.

Educational Notes by W.B. Stovall

The lower Sandstone school has suspended till September. The teacher, Miss Dice, is rustivating among friends on Elk creek.

Prof Dame is prospecting for a school in this county. He is a worthy young gentleman and a first-class teacher.

The county Superintendent will send to district clerks at an early date a list of the books selected by the county board of education for public school libraries.

The Greer County normal institute is being largely attended. Prof Robinson is giving eminent satisfaction as an instructor. Members of district boards are invited to visit the institute. If you wish to employ a live, progressive teacher that is the place to find him or her.

Prof McKenzie has been engaged to teach the Timber Creek School. He is a young gentleman of superior attainments, and comes well recommended by the supervisor of schools in the province where he formerly taught, Ontario, Canada. He will be with us during the institute.

Remember, the institute is to begin Monday, August 7th. There will be an examination for teacher certificates Aug. 25th and 26th.

There is a clamor in some parts of the county for a division of school districts. This is a matter the people should give serious consideration before they take steps to carry their plans into execution. It is true some of the districts are very large and the school houses inconveniently located, but we must remember that we are in a new and undeveloped country and cannot expect all the comforts and conveniences enjoyed by the people of older and richer communities. Some of our new settlers are laboring under the impression that if they can secure a district with a scholastic population of fifteen or twenty they can run a school indefinitely on the territorial fund supplemented by a light local tax. Herein lies their mistake. The bulk of our school money must be raised by local taxation. A large majority of our people are poor. To place them in districts with an assessed valuation of five or ten thousand dollars and require them to levy a tax sufficient to run a school that would confer any substantial benefit is to impose upon them a burden, considering the tax levy for other purposes, that would be absolutely unupportable.

A new fake on the Oklahoma farmer is being worked. A preacher arriving at the farm and asking to be sheltered for the night is entertaining the family at supper when a young man and woman drive up and call for the farmer, saying they want to get married and asking where a preacher lives. The farmer, foreseeing a lively scene, says he has a minister if he will marry them. The minister consents, the young couple line up and the ceremony is read, a license produced and the farmer and wife are asked to put their names to as witnesses. In about a week those signatures appear at the bank as promissory notes.—Wichita Eagle

Mr. Johnson brought in another radish from his farm on Starvation Friday. It measured 21 inches in circumference and would compare favorably in size with beets raised outside of Oklahoma. These radishes, although so large, are sweet and tender. Mr. Johnson saved seed from his crop three years ago and noticed a marked improvements the second year; this, the third year, shows a further advance, and there's no telling what his next crop will be.

Prof Osborn presented the editor with some very fine Irish potatoes Saturday. On the 15th of April the professor planted 15 pounds of seed and his crop was over nine bushels.

Saddlings from Saddler

Editor Sunbeam:

Rain, rain, rain! Mud, mud, mud! Bad roads, bad roads, bad roads!

Well, everybody is complaining of heavy crops. People will soon learn not to plant so much.

Jesse Gibbons says he will have to move his fence back before he will have some room to stack his millet.

Henry Cope has his hat set on the back of his head and is wiping sweat both ways. He says haying is the cause.

Prof VanVacter has just arrived with two loads of lumber. That means build.

Joe McDonald has been wearing a very pleasant and smiling face of late, and on being asked the reason why, said that he had become trustee of the Saddler school.

A certain party was very much amused at a conversation between a young man and young lady, but it only proved to be Mr. Dave Thomas talking to himself.

The last term of the Saddler school was entirely successful, and the trustees say they will hold the school over and let Prof VanVacter teach them another such school next spring.

At the annual meeting of this district the patrons decided to build a schoolhouse by subscription and locate same in center of district.

Mr. B.B. VanVacter talks in his sleep about white face calves and fine crops.

Quite a number of prospectors are in the country now looking for locations.

Proposals

Proposals for building a Court house at Cheyenne, O.T.

Office of the County Clerk,
Roger Mills County,
Cheyenne, O.T.,
July 31st, 1899

Sealed proposals will be received by the Board of County Commissioners of Roger Mills County until 10 o'clock a.m. on the 30th day of August, 1899, at the county clerk's office, for the erection of a court house at Cheyenne, O.T., to cost the sum of $2000.00. The building to be two stories, square; to have stone foundation, brick flues and two coats of paint on the outside walls; to contain seven offices, a court, and a jury room. Court room to be furnished with plain pine benches, with backs. A certified check payable to the County of Roger Mills, for $200.00 must accompany each proposal, to be forfeited to the County of Roger Mills, if the bidder fails to enter in contract for the work bid upon and to give the requisite bond for the faithful performance of same within ten days after contract is awarded to him.

The board will make award to parties offering the best plans and specifications and will reserve the right to reject any or all bids.

From the Klondike
Nulaho², June 9, 1899
Editor Sunbeam:

At Dutch Harbor I wrote you of my trip to that place. We sailed from there June 18th and in four days reached St Lawrence Island, where we spent two weeks waiting for the ice to run out through Bering Straits, sailed on July 3rd, and on the Fourth saw the ice for the first time. On the 6th we came to anchor with large fields of ice in front extending as far as one could see. We were the first vessel through the mouth of the inlet and landed and unloaded about twenty miles from the mouth of the Kobuk River. Here we stopped to build our boats with which to track our provisions, etc. up the river, and on the 17th of July my party, consisting of Mr. Silence and myself and four other men, together with a native man, his wife and boy and three dogs, started up the river.

The women are better workers than the men, and the dogs are first rate help on the tow line. In most of the river the current is so swift that it is impossible to row against it and progress can only be made by all hands pulling on a tow line with one man in the boat to keep her off the sand bars with a pole. The banks not being provided with a tow path it is necessary to scramble through brush, over drift piles, half way up to one's knees in mud or up to the waist in water, cutting away the overhanging trees and bushes and frequently rowing from shore to shore when the nature of the bank makes it necessary. In this section of the country all the rivers follow a most tortuous course, often requiring miles of travel to gain what could be made overland in a few minutes. In this way we traveled for two months making about ten miles a day. We went up the Ambler river about fifty miles prospecting, finding good enough surface indications in the way of colors almost everywhere but becoming less and less as one goes down and generally none at all at bed rock. In many cases it was not possible to continue digging on account of the water flowing into the hole in spite of the thermometer at 50 degrees below.

The conglomerate rock seems to carry these float colors and give them up annually to be deposited on the sand bars or washed downstream but they are too light to sink or accumulate on bed rock.

On the Ambler River the four men left us and the rest of the party returned to Kobuk.

On October 18th two other men and I started to cross the divide into the Allenkakat³ (sic) drainage, a distance of eighty miles, with back packs, mine weighing one hundred and thirty-five pounds, consisting of two sacks of flour, pick, shovel, rifle, etc. Climbing mountains and crossing hummocky swamps with a load of this kind is not the easiest thing in the world. To walk between the hummocks would be knee deep in water and to stay on top of the slippery mounds covered with moss and bushes requires considerable athletic agility.

We reached Beaver City on the Allenkakat November 11th, and found considerable excitement over the surface indications but the ground was not sufficiently frozen to allow of much digging on account of water. I staked some claims however and returned to Kobuk River to bring over balance of provisions on sleds, relaying in three loads. Upon my return to the Allenkakat I found holes had been sunk on all the creeks, some of them 50 or 60 feet deep, with the same discouraging results as in the Kobuk country. About three thousand men have wintered and worked in this section of Alaska and absolutely nothing has been found.

At Beaver City I met Mr. Hill of Philadelphia Exploration and Mining Company, and arranged to join his party for the coming year's work up the Yukon. I continued sledding my provisions down to their steamer, the Jennie M, and helped them to save her from the run of ice when the winter broke up. She had stuck on a sand bar at the head of a slough in the fall, and the water falling, left her high and dry all winter. The water running over the ice before it broke was not sufficient to float her into the slough, but just as the ice broke up and commenced to run it crowded enough water ahead of it to allow her to swing into the slough. Some of the ice following her in crowded her onto the bank, but finally floated safe and the breaking up of the ice in the Arctic was over. We then started for the Yukon, running up the Hagatzikakat to pick up some of the Jennie M party who had worked on Clear Creek, and will start up the Yukon tomorrow.

Killing in Day County

Word was brought to town Monday evening of a killing in Day County some ten miles east from Grand, at the ranch of Harry Hamilton. From what we can learn it appears that Hamilton and four other men had a bunch of cattle rounded up near his dugout when he saw Ira Cooper and John Hensley approaching. There had been trouble between the men, and as Cooper was coming up Hamilton told him to keep away or he'd kill him. Cooper replied that he guessed Hamilton wouldn't shoot and proceeded to ride closer. Hamilton then took a Winchester from a fence against which it had been leaning and shot Cooper through the left arm. The latter fell or got off his horse, drawing his pistol as he did so. Five other shots were then fired, three by Cooper and two by Hamilton, after which Cooper was found to have received another wound in his left shoulder and still another in the head, the latter shattering the entire skull into small pieces and causing instant death. Hamilton received a slight wound in the face, and is in jail. Until the examining trial it will be hard to get all the facts. We simply give the above as it was told to us by several parties who have been over in the neighborhood of the trouble. Cooper was buried here on Tuesday last.

Everybody is talking railroad now. That something of great importance to Cheyenne is about to happen is evident, but what is it—two railroads?

The merchants of Cheyenne receive about 100,000 pounds of freight weekly at the present time and this amount will be largely increased as fall advances.

There will be no open season this year when cattle can come in indiscriminately. After November 1st and until January 1st cattle can come in after inspection by federal and territorial officers if found to be free from ticks. No charge will be made for inspection.

Greer County has been quarantined till November 1st by the territorial live stock board.

Mr. Fuller, live stock agent of the Choctaw railroad company, was in town yesterday. He said that the engineers were to have been put in the field last Friday to run a line from Weatherford, Ok., to Amarillo, Texas. Owing to some delay on the eastern end of the road they did not start at that time, but are probably now in the field. Mr. Fuller thought that the road would follow the Washita River as far as practicable, but had no authentic information on that point. The investigation conducted by the engineers would settle that matter. Of one thing Mr. Fuller seemed to be certain, and that was that the road would be built as close as possible to the water courses, so as to facilitate the shipment of cattle.

Oklahoma School Money⁴

Superintendent of Public Instruction Hopkins has completed the semi-annual apportionment of school money derived from the leasing of school sections. On the basis of a school population of 101,474, as shown by the recently completed census, the various counties will be benefited in the following amounts:

Roger Mills: 886 children; $141.76
Day: 364 children; $58.24

Mrs. Slane's residence on Main Street is about completed. It is one of the neatest looking places in town.

W.E. Lilly of Chillicothe, Mo., contemplates establishing a nursery in our county in the near future.

Dr. Standifer's brother will take the doctor's position as government doctor at the Red Moon agency.

Mr. Blanscet of Wood has gone to Arkansas to visit his mother who is in her 82nd year.

Mr. and Mrs. L.L. Collins are spending a vacation at their old home in Ohio.

The coming season of school in Cheyenne promises to be exceptionally good. Some twenty new houses will be erected by parties who desire to give their children a thorough education.

Rev T.H. Kinser will start for Virginia next week on a visit to his parents.

We thought a few weeks ago that our county would produce a monster crop of corn this year, but some of the late planting is said to be poor and may reduce the average to thirty-five bushels per acre.

business demands that suitable offices be provided for the public business and safe keeping of the records, which might by accident of fire prove an irreparable loss, and believing that a wise economy dictates that the county can better afford to build and own such building, as the saving in rents and convenience of citizens having business in such offices, and believing that a suitable building large enough to contain the various offices and a suitable room for holding court cannot be built, however plain, for less than $2000.00, and realizing such sum to be in excess of legal levy, we promise to pay various sums set opposite our names on completion of such building as before stated: Thurmond Bros. $70, L.A. Resolves to erect a court house and to pay the sum of $2,000 for the same, and the above proposition of Thurmond Bros et al is hereby accepted, it being expressly agreed and provided that the amounts subscribed by the said Thurmond Bros et al be deposited in the Cheyenne State Bank, at Cheyenne, O.T., on or before the 30th day of August, 1899, subject to the order of the commissioners court on the completion of the afore described court house.

Mr. "Bob" Mead, one of Greer County's best citizens, was in Cheyenne last week.

There will be a big wolf hunt next Monday, September 18. The start will be made at W.M. Tubbs' on Plumb Creek, two miles west of town. Bring out your trailing hounds.

Commissioner Maddux was in town Monday.

Miss Laura Kimbell has returned from Texas, and will be a pupil in the Cheyenne school the coming year.

Prof J.B. Tracy was on the city streets on Monday. His school at Crowe has been postponed three weeks.

Prof E.E. Tracy, who is teaching on Nine Mile, was in town last Saturday and Sunday.

Sheriff Thompson showed his nerve and fearlessness of danger when, last week, he walked across Broadway in the face of an angry man with a shotgun in his hands and demanded and took said gun from said man.

At the meeting of Confederate Veterans at Berlin last week, the following were elected for the next year: T.P. Bingham, Capt; E.G. Thurmond, Adj. Business transacted: The next general reunion will be held at Cheyenne City, Sept. 3rd, 1900. Committee of Arrangements: Jas Jackson, J.M. Hefferman, W.W. Anderson, J.H. Richerson, and B.F. Rosser. Cheyenne will give the old soldiers a royal welcome at the reunion.

Jas Jackson has some cattle to sell and some lumber to buy and some carpenters to hire, to build a dwelling house in town. The school is the attraction.

Pleasant weather is here again.

Mr. John Jackson has been helping Mr. Beaty in the store this week.

Mr. Wallace is getting as handy as any clerk of long experience in the position of district clerk.

Ex-county surveyor Peace was in town Monday with a number of settlers who were filling on Mills County lands.

All persons who are interested in organizing a brass band at Cheyenne are requested to meet at the school house on Saturday night, Sept. 16th.

Calvin Rosser, the wide-awake undersheriff, made an extended trip to the southeastern part of the county this week to invite witnesses to come to court.

Our popular p.m. Chas Miller, is assisting behind Merchant Hodge's counter.

Mrs. Gallion of Arapahoe, and Mrs. Dodder of Lawrence, Kansas, were visiting their sister, Mrs. Wm Slane. Both ladies are accompanied by their husband and children.

H.M. West, a farmer on Elk creek, is said to have raised 350 bushels of onions on one acre of land.

A license has been issued to Wm G. Brown and Mrs. Nettie Crane, of Hammon, and the ceremony is to take place Sunday.

We always thought the Calvin Rosser was a free trade democrat, but Joe Miller says that he is a Jim Blain reciprocity man, believing that one accommodation deserves another.

Commissioner Bright and wife were here Monday admiring the growing wonder of western Oklahoma.

John Dunn one of the most successful stockmen in these parts, came to town Monday for a little relaxation. It's a pity some of our girls don't snap him up if he's snapable.

Mr. J.M. Mofeitt and family, living on Sweetwater, were in town this week visiting and trading. A strictly business man in educational affairs as well as financial, he has wisely selected the Cheyenne school to send at least one of his boys to.

John Salyer, the genial chief engineer of Thurmond Bros mule train, will commence the erection of a town residence right away.

John Bowman is said to be the champion rifle shot of the C&A country, barring the bald headed editor.

Mr. F.E. Herring will build a residence here and is looking up suitable lots.

Carl Fuchs and Walter Fuchs were in Judge Osborn's court Friday charged with assault and attempting to kill J.H. Cosper on Thursday. The case was continued till today, the 15th, and defendants placed under a bond of $1000 each.

Some excitement was caused in town Friday evening by the arrest of Carl Fuchs of the Buffalo creek neighborhood on a charge of assault with intent to kill J.H. Cosper, a resident of Nine Mile creek in Day County. From the evidence it appeared that the trouble was expected between the two men owing to circumstances which transpired the day previous, and which they had come to town to adjust in court. J.H. Cosper testified that he was walking down Broadway when Fuchs called to him. Seeing that Fuchs had a shotgun, Cosper did not stop but proceeded to make tracks across the street and got behind a horse hitched there. Fuchs followed some distance calling twice more but stopped with only the width of the street between them, and stood there until Sheriff Thompson crossed over and took charge of his gun. Some of the witnesses to the affair evidently thought Fuchs meant to shoot, but their testimony was not convincing to the court and as there was no evidence of threats being used, the judge found the defendant not guilty.

And now there is talk of a divorce.

Ab Anderson has returned from Kansas City where he went for medical treatment, looking young and frisky as a spring chicken.

We are sorry to learn the W.H. Anderson or "Black Bill" as his chums call him, is under treatment for cancer.

Mrs. H.P. Goodwin will have a residence built on the site formerly occupied by the Cheyenne hotel, to give the boys a chance to attend school.

Our town was visited by a heavy rain Friday night, but Saturday night brought a regular cistern filler, and now Cheyenne is heeled for the dry winter which is generally our portion.

Educational Notes

Dr. Bates Morris has been requested to deliver his lecture on "Language, Its Origin and History," on Friday night, September 29, at Berlin. Dr. Morris has kindly accepted the invitation, and teachers attending the Association may expect a treat. This popular lecture has been delivered at Music Hall, St. Louis, and before several college literary clubs, and well received by a critical public.

The citizens of Berlin will furnish teachers entertainment free during the Association.

Mrs. Maggie Wyatt, of Mangum, has been employed to teach at the Taylor school house, Elk creek. Mrs. Wyatt taught at this place last fall and winter, and the people were highly pleased with her work.

Prof J.H. Osborn will teach the school on Dead Indian. Prof Osborn is a first class teacher and we congratulate the people of Dead Indian on securing his services.

Mr. Young is preparing to enlarge his town residence to be ready for school.

The Hamilton and Murcheson murder cases in Day County have been transferred to Enid, where they will be tried next month.

Mr. Smith and Miss Alice Whatley were married last Sunday by Judge Osborn. The bride and groom live on Nine Mile. The knot, when tied by the judge, is hard to unravel.

Mr. Tom Jackson moved his cattle to Greer County this week. He will keep them there through the winter. Cheer up, Aching Heart, he will return in the spring.

Miss Francis Campbell was in town Wednesday trading and visiting. She will attend the Cheyenne school.

Mr. J.W. Tubbs has moved to his brother's place in order to be near the school.

Miss E. Williams is teaching a second term in penmanship.

Peter Thurmond has been busy the past week telling his chums of the wonders of Kansas City. It was a great trip for him.

Mr. W.W. Anderson and family will move into town in order to be close to the school. Some time ago WW started off to hunt for a better location than he now has, but after a long search he returned, convinced that such a place was not to be found.

Fire destroyed the house and furniture of Doc Brazel, a resident of Sunflower Flat, last Sunday. The citizens of Cheyenne contributed liberally to a fund for his relief and he will soon be sheltered again.

Last Monday Sheriff Thompson made an important arrest of one T.M. Jones who is charged with being a fugitive from justice in the Chickasaw nation. The crime charged is incest with his young daughter, Minnie Jones, who at her deathbed made her statement charging her father with being criminally intimate with her for three years. The prisoner lived at Marlow, I.T., previous to moving to Greer County. He settled north of Mangum about 14 miles, near the W.C. Shadden homestead, and was living there in 1896. Sometime in 1897 he disposed of his claim for a small consideration, sent his daughter to Marlow, and then disappeared. In August 1897, his daughter died. There are many people in Greer County who know about the crime. It is reported there is a reward of $2500 for the arrest. Officers in the Indian Territory have been wired and in the meantime the prisoner has been remanded in jail until next Tuesday, Oct. 3rd. Roger Mills County is not a safe place for fugitives from justice. Our officers let no prisoners escape and take all stray ones from other places that happen to wander here.

Railroad Talk

The Choctaw surveying corps is gathering at Weatherford and will start from that place about the 15th. The delay has been caused in getting a locating engineer, as so much railroad building is going on that engineers are in demand.

Two routes are in view. One will cross the ridge about seven or ten miles south of Arapahoe, while the north one will follow the Washita valley and comes in a few miles of town.

The surveyors will occupy several months and the grading will commence early in the year 1900.

The Rock Island will build from Kingfisher to Arapahoe.

In speaking of the activity of the Santa Fe and Rock Island railroads in building throughout Oklahoma and the Indian Territory, the Wall Street Financial News says:

“This is a case where the building of railroads has followed settlement of the country. The sections now being traversed by the surveyors are pretty well settled. There has been a rush to them for several years and the people simply have to have railroad facilities. They now haul their abundant crops long distances in wagons. This country is said to be one of the richest in the United States in agricultural resources. Both cotton and wheat are produced there. Most of the crops are hauled to Galveston, but the railroads have a fair, steady business of a general character north bound.”—Arapahoe Bee

Custer's Fight

Thirty-one Years Ago on the Present Site of Cheyenne, O.T

The following description was given by Ben Clark to a reporter for the Kansas City Star, and published in that paper some time ago.

The opening scene of the battle is located about one mile and half west of town on the farm now occupied by Mr. Butler.

The trouble which led to the fight began on the Arkansas River, near Fort Larned, in 1867. There had been numerous depredations by Indians who were supposed to be Cheyenne and Arapahoe. General Sheridan issued an iron-clad order, commanding the Cheyenne and Arapahoe to assemble at a certain place for council. All Indians who refused to obey the order were to be regarded as renegades. Rumors were circulated that the Indians were to be severely punished. The Cheyennes became alarmed and suddenly slipped away, before the order could be sent to their chiefs. A few days later the Arapahoes disappeared and joined the Cheyennes.

In September, 1868, the Seventh Cavalry, composed of between 800 and 900 men, was in camp on Kiowa Creek where it emptied into the Cimarrone (sic) river. Sully, the commanding officer, was sick and had returned to Dodge City, leaving the troops under Major Elliott. Clark had been working as a teamster for John A. Tappan, & Co. of Dodge City, hauling buffalo hides from the plains. Because of his accurate knowledge of the country he was employed by Major Elliott as guide and scout. Sully had been laughed at by the soldiers for riding in an ambulance and leaving most of the work to Colonel Keogh. After Sully reached Dodge City, Custer was put in command of the Seventh. He had lately been under suspension pending charges brought against him for shooting deserters, and was still smarting the under the discipline.

Before leaving Dodge City to join the regiment, Custer was much impressed by a scout named Joe Milner, who went under the soubriquet of California Joe. He was a tall awkward fellow, wearing a coat with the tail burned off, and carried a rifle with a ridiculously long barrel. He criticized Sully in a braggadocios way, saying that "the army needed officer who don't pull on the bits or ride in ambulances." This pleased Custer and he chose California Joe as his chief scout in place of Clark. California Joe's career was brief. Three detachments of scouts were sent out the second night after Custer's troops began moving south from Kiowa Creek. California Joe got hilariously drunk and flagrantly disobeyed orders by striking matches to light his pipe, risking a surprise by the keen-eyed hostiles. He was tied on a mule and taken into camp and Clark again made chief of scouts.

It was already cold weather and snow was on the ground. Custer was impatient to proceed rapidly and harassed the men and his subordinates by his arbitrary conduct. He was a hard master, but his dash and cavalier bearing held the admiration of his troopers. The regiment began moving about November 1st. It was announced the second night out that the march would begin next morning at daybreak. The stars were still shining when Custer arose, swearing and "charging around." His brother, Colonel Tom Custer, had particularly good appetite that morning and lingered at his table, to the disgust of his superior officers, who told him repeatedly to hurry and finish his breakfast. The colonel still lingered, however, and brought on an explosion of wrath. Custer charged into the tent kicking over the mess table and sent dishes and victuals (sic) flying in all directions. Three teamsters who failed to hear the bugle were several minutes late in getting their teams hitched. They were punished by being made to walk all day in the snow. Said Clark: "He worked his scouts like hell, and they would stay out as long as possible to keep from being run to death."

The first stop was at the present site of Camp Supply, where Custer had been ordered by Sheridan to establish a base of supplies. The place was merely a camp at first, the grain and provisions being protected from the weather by tarpaulins. After leaving Camp Supply the route led directly to what is now Whitehead, in Woodward County, where it veered more to the southwest and crossed into D County, about ten miles east of the Panhandle line. It was thence south through the Antelope hills to the Washita River, which was followed to the Cheyenne village, near which the regiment arrived on the night of November 26th.

Early in the night Clark and his scouts struck a hostile trail leading southeast from the Panhandle. The ponies had gone two abreast and there was no trace of dragging lodge poles. The Indians had made the trail on November the 25th. The snow was melting at the time and the black marks left by the ponies' hoofs could be easily followed by the scouts. Under Clark were twelve Osage Indian scouts, blood-thirsty wretches, who afterwards disgraced the regiments. Two of these scouts discovered a camp fire. Crawling cautiously toward it they learned that the Indians had gone down the river, having joined the war party. The lodge poles were still standing. The scouts now moved very carefully.

Several miles further down the river from the summit of a hill the faint tinkle of pony bells was heard in the valley below and the ponies themselves were soon seen, their bodies standing out darkly against the snow. Custer was in advance of the troops and came up in a few minutes. He dismounted and the party lay down in the snow and peered over the ridge of the hill. It was a clear, frosty starlight night, being surrounded by dense timber, in a low valley. The regiment was halted before it had climbed the hill. The troops were on the north side of the river, but it was not known what side the village was on. The command was dismounted and each man held his horse and made as little noise as possible. No cooking was allowed and the hungry men made the best of it by chewing hard-tack.

It was now about 1 o'clock in the morning. A council of officers and scouts was held. The group was startled by the remarkable brilliancy of a star, which they mistook for an Indian signal among the low lying hills. Custer, who was easily impressed by such incidents, called it "The Star of the Washita," and said that it presaged victory.

Clark and seven scouts, among them being Joe and Jack Corwin, were sent to learn the exact location of the village. They drew close enough to see the smoke curling from the lodges, and found that the village was on the south side of the river, on a level stretch of ground. Further to the south, and parallel to the swinging shore line of the river was an embankment, probably fifty feet high, with an almost perpendicular front. This embankment was the abrupt termination of an undulating prairie which stretched away still further to the south. The lowland close to the river continued down the stream for several miles, and merged gradually with the lessening height of the embankment into comparatively level ground. About a mile above the village was a trail crossing over the Washita. On the north side of the river were low spurs of hills which increased in height northward until they reached much higher hills, to which they were almost at right angles. An Indian trail, followed by the war party, led down the river on the north side.

The officers had removed their sabers for fear the clanking would be heard by the dogs, and village aroused. After the scouts had described the topography of the camp, Custer mapped out his plan of attack. The regiment was divided into four detachments. Five troops were to remain with Custer and six were to take up positions as follows: Major Elliott, with Troops I, H, and M, and Colonel Thompson with Troops B and F, were sent by a circuitous route to positions parallel to each other and facing the village on the level ground below it, to cut off flight in that direction. Colonel Myers, with one troop, was to take up a position on the undulating prairie south of the village. Custer, in addition to his five companions, had the scouts and Colonel W.W. Cook with his forty sharpshooters. Shortly before the fight the sharpshooters were to advance on foot to a position on the north side of the river, opposite the village. Custer would make the charge from above, passing the river at the trail crossing, and driving the Indians toward Elliott, Thompson, and Myers. As daylight approached a fog overspread the valley.

The village belonged to the Cheyenne, under Black Kettle. Below them were the Arapahoe, of whom Little Raven was head chief, and Left Hand and Powder Face active chiefs. There were about 500 men, women and children in the village. For twenty miles down the Washita were other Indian villages; Kiowa, Comanche, Mescalero Apaches, and Wichita. The attack was to be at gray dawn, and the signal for battle the striking of "Gary Owen" by the regimental band an air Custer said more nearly suggested the trampling and the roar of a cavalry charge than any other he knew. The band was stationed near the river crossing. The region a vast, wild solitude; the silence oppressive.

With a crash the music burst upon the ears of the expectant men, who answered it with a yell, as the tumult of trampling horses and cheering troops went thundering by.

It is about time that something was done to provide for Christmas amusements.

Mr. Herring has moved into his new residence.

Mr. T.C. Lewis, a druggist, has arrived from Mangum and will remain here permanently. He gave up a lucrative position there owing to the fact that he has interests here which demand his attention. He is a very pleasant gentleman and we are glad to welcome him. Mrs. Lewis will arrive in a short time.

W.B. Woods of the Sweetwater country gave us a pleasant call Tuesday. He reported that there was a very enjoyable gathering at Capt. Banks' new house last Friday, and that a brand new baby had arrived in the family of Frank Ragsdale.

Miss Florence Thurmond has gone to Fort Worth where she will remain during the winter to finish her musical education.

Mr. Wafford of the Buffalo neighborhood brought the pointer dog advertised for Mr. Bowman to town Saturday and turned him over without reward.

By oversight the editor neglected to record the arrival of a fine girl baby at the home of J.H. Osborn some weeks ago. The professor is much pleased with his school on Dead Indian. He has made extensive improvements to his home and is happy generally, and we are glad of it because he is a right good citizen.

Mr. Prestage has brought 300 head of cattle in the Dead Indian country from the territory.

Mr. Guernsey returned safely with the cattle he purchased in the territory.

With a crash the music burst upon the ears of the expectant men, who answered it with a yell. As the tumult of trampling horses and cheering troops went thundering by the musicians lost control of their horses and were carried away into the fight, the hills echoing again and again to the strains of "Gary Owen." Custer, surrounded by his scouts, led the charge. His magnificent horse at a single bound cleared the river which was a single stream at this place. The Indians were taken completely by surprise, ran panic stricken from their lodges, to be shot down almost before sleep had left their eyelids. From every lodge came fugitives who sought to run the gauntlet of fire. Many of them scrambled down on the ice of the Washita and ran under cover of the wooded bank along the river toward the other villages. Numbers fell before the crossfire of Cook's sharpshooters. Most of the fugitives encountered the detachment under Elliott and Thompson, and it was here that the greatest slaughter took place.

Squaws with their children climbed the steep embankment south of the village and gained the prairie where Myers's command lay in wait for them. The Osage scouts, before they could be intercepted, shot down young women and mutilated their bodies in a horrible manner, cutting off their legs and arms and breasts with knives. An Osage brought in Black Kettle's scalp and claimed the glory of having killed him. The old warrior fell near a troop commanded by Captain Hamilton who was killed at the beginning of the fight, being shot from his horse.

Clark, riding to the prairie on the south saw fully half of Myer's men chasing the panic-stricken women and children. He reported it to Custer and asked him whether he wanted them killed.

"No, replied Custer. "Tell Myers to call off his men and take the runaways to a big lodge and put a guard over them."

Clark got together about sixty women and children.

The hunting and slaughter of fugitives continued during the greater part of the morning. The Indians fought desperately, but were taken wholly at a disadvantage. Clark estimated the Cheyenne loss at seventy-five warriors and fully as many women and children killed. The dead were left unburied.

The number of wounded was never known, but there are still Indians in Western Oklahoma who bear scars received that cold November day. The dusk of the morning gave cover for escape, or the bloodshed would have been greater. Clark, who rode stirrup to stirrup with Custer, said that the latter killed only one Indian, a warrior who was preparing to fire at him at a distance of only a few feet. Custer killed him with his pistol.

After Clark had returned with the women and children he heard a heavy firing down the river in the vicinity of Cook's sharp shooters. He rode rapidly in that direction and found a small party of warriors, with their women and children at bay under a river embankment. During the freshet (sic) the bank had been undermined and caved in. The mass of dirt made an excellent barricade, the Indians getting between it and the bank. They were protected from above by the overhanging turf which had not been carried down with the dirt. The Indians were firing at the sharp shooters on the opposite side of the river, who were unable to dislodge them, but poured a deadly hail of bullets into their midst. The shots of the Indians grew fewer and fewer until they ceased all together. The warriors were dead. Clark became a spectator of a terrible example of a Cheyenne mother's despair. A squaw arose from behind the barricade, holding her baby at arm's length. In her other hand was a long knife. The sharpshooter mistook the baby for a white captive and yelled, "Kill that squaw; she's murdering a white child." Before a gun could be fired the mother, with one stroke of the knife, disemboweled her child, drove the knife to the hilt into her own breast and fell dead. A trooper poked his carbine over the embankment and shot her through the heart, but it was needless cruelty.

Many of the Indians were only with bows and arrows, having grabbed up the first weapon within reach when they began their fight. Most of their shields and lances were left in the lodges. Clark came upon a wrinkled, gray-haired squaw, who stood at bay like an enraged tigress. She had an old cavalry saber raised defiantly for battle. She was with difficulty persuaded to lay down the saber, after being assured that she would not be killed.

In a ravine that traversed the plateau south of the village, Myers's men discovered a man hiding with his baby—(unable to read words)—a Mexican, Polloi by name who had been captured by the Cheyenne when a child. He could speak a little English. When Clark rode up, the troopers were discussing whether they would kill their captive. Polloi suspected his fate, and stood stoically awaiting the end. Finally one of the soldiers said to him, "Move off down the ravine." Polloi turned and then asking beseechingly "You will take the baby, won't you?" The trooper took the child in his arms and Polloi darted away. He had run scarcely thirty feet before he fell, pierced through the back with bullets. His child was given to a captive squaw. The little one grew to womanhood and married a white man in Southwestern Oklahoma, where she lived until her death, a few years ago.

It was from this spot that Major Elliott started on the foray that resulted in the massacre of himself and those that followed him. Shortly after the shooting of Polloi, Elliott, looking down the river, saw through his field glass a number of Indians, mostly boys, skulking in the timber and moving as rapidly as possible toward the hostile village. Elliott was separated from his command and when he said, "There's a lot of escaped Indians; come on boys, let's take 'em in." The men who joined him did so, on their own accord. Clark watched the party ride away, but did not follow. Men and horses soon disappeared in the timber.

The news of the battle had been carried down the river, and warriors could be seen gathering on the hills to the north. Clark said that he never saw a more magnificent lot of Indians. The hills appeared to be alive with them. They were gorgeous in war bonnets and paint. Some were armed with guns; others with bows and arrows, lances and gaudy shields. Their bracelets and armllets glistened in the sunshine and their ponies were adorned for battle with vermilion and feathers. They captured the overcoats of the sharpshooters which had been left in the rear when the soldiers advanced to the fight. This pleased the Indians hugely, and they dared the soldiers to come and get them.

The bugles sounded for the scattered troopers to assemble. Nearly a thousand ponies and mules had been captured. Custer decided to strike the hostiles the worst possible blow by destroying their ponies. The best animals in the herd, about 200, were driven among the officers and men, Custer taking four fine mules. The remaining 800 were bunched against the steep bank south of the village and two troops detailed to kill them. One troop stood above the herd and the other in the valley below. It took nearly two hours to kill them. The hostiles who were gathering on the hills witnessed the destruction and with shrill yells reviled the soldiers as cowards and dared them to fight.

The ammunition was running low and Custer, surprised at the constant increasing numbers of hostiles, was not anxious to risk a night attack. It had already become necessary to send out Major Berry with a heavy line of pickets to drive the Indians further back into the hills and hold them at bay, as the latter had a number of long range rifles and were dropping bullets into the camp. The main wagon train was miles away in the Antelope hills, with a rough, snow-covered country intervening. Major Bell, quartermaster of the regiment, who had been stationed in the rear, came up before noon with several thousand rounds of ammunition. There was not enough, however, for prolonged fighting.

It was decided to burn the village which consisted of about seventy-five lodges. Some of them were very large, being from twenty to twenty-two buffalo robes in size. The average size was from ten to twelve hides. There was an abundance of cooked buffalo meat and bread, which had been prepared evidently for war parties. Large quantities of powder, lead and percussion caps were found. Clark saw four white and three Indian scalps. Many buffalo robes and much clothing had been left behind. The village made a big conflagration and burned with a fierce heat, the Indians howling with rage at the sight. The danger of being cut off from the supplies in the Antelope hills was growing hourly more serious. A lookout was kept for the return of Major Elliott and his men. It was feared that they had been killed. As the hours of the afternoon wore away, Custer abandoned his plan of following the Indians and prepared to move under cover of night. The troops started as sundown, crossing the Washita where they had gone thundering over at daybreak. For several miles down the north side of the Washita was level bottom land. Strategy was employed to deceive the hostiles. The regiment was drawn up in close marching order. Three hundred yards ahead of the advance guard of one troop were the scouts. A quarter of mile in the rear of the advance guard was another troop, close behind which were the captives on ponies. Then came the main body of the troops, the wagon train and the rear guard. It was apparently a general movement to attack the village. The hostiles deserted the hills and rode as rapid as possible toward the villages, firing at long range. Troop flankers were thrown out near the river, to guard against surprise and to look for Elliott. After marching slowly for six or seven miles, an orderly dashed up with orders to countermarch, and move briskly. The rear guard now grew very restless, expected a general assault by the Indians, but the latter in their haste failed to suspect the ruse of the countermarch. The night was clear but dark. The ember heaps of the desolate village were still blazing as the soldiers marched by. The regiment rode all night and came to the wagon train at daylight on the Washita about twenty miles above the village. Two howitzers, the only artillery with the expedition, were with the train. The soldiers dismounted for breakfast, but were not permitted to sleep. After a hasty meal a rapid march was begun to Camp Supply, which was reached without trouble from the Indians.

General Sheridan had reached Camp Supply the day after the regiment had left, and was there when it returned, as was the Nineteenth Kansas. These soldiers had started out under Governor Crawford to go south with Custer, but got lost in the rough lands along Buffalo creek. Another expedition was now formed and General Sheridan assumed command. The troops were in motion in about a week, headed south, to deliver a crushing blow to the hostiles and to succor Elliott and his men, if they were possibly alive. The Washita was reached about eight miles below the battleground. A halt was made to search for Elliott. Custer told Clark to scout south for Indian signs. Several big trails were found, all leading down the river. It was decided that the expedition should move in the same direction. Clark was sent out to find a good camp, where there were plenty of cottonwood trees, the tender twigs of which made good forage for the horses. He reported that he had already found such a camp about twenty-five miles below.

In Custer's account of the campaign Clark's name is not mentioned. "It was due to a dislike which he conceived for me while I was executing this order," said Clark. The camp I selected was on the north side of the Washita. To reach it the troops had to cross Whetstone creek, which had banks so steep that they were impassable for the wagons, except where the stream empties into the Washita. I was in advance with the scouts. From the top of a hill we saw that the troops had stopped, but were not dismounted. We rode back and asked whether they were going into camp.

"No, replied Sheridan, but we must go in the other direction, as the scouts here—meaning some of his own—say that we can't cross the creek." I knew this would require a twenty-five mile march, and told him as much. Custer had made up his mind that the detour must be made and asked Sheridan what should be done. "Well, we'll follow the advice of Clark and pay no attention to the other scouts. Custer showed plainly that he was incensed at the failure to follow the route which he had stamped with his approval. His ill humor was not lessened when Sheridan called me to his tent that night and put his own scouts under me."

The troopers were thrown into excitement by the news that Elliott and his men had been found dead. On the south side of the Washita, in an open space about three miles below, the ruins of the Cheyenne village, a searching party was startled at the sight of a pile of naked bodies. "They were as white as the snow around them," said Clark, "and stiff in the rigor of death. Strange as it may seem they had not been molested by the wolves and other wild animals so numerous in that region."

Everybody except Elliott's had been shockingly mutilated. Skulls were crushed with the war clubs, ears and noses and legs had been cut off, scalps torn away and the bodies pierced in countless places with bullets and arrows. Elliott had been greatly admired by the Indians for his bravery long before the fight. They remembered this when he was dead and treated him as a valorous enemy by severing his right hand at the wrist and his left foot at the ankle, leaving each attached by a tendon. The body bore no other marks save the death wounds. It was evident that the bodies had been brought to that place and a war dance held around them. Elliott's body was carried to Camp Supply and sent to his relatives. The other bodies were buried temporarily where they lay.

Clark denies emphatically the accusation often brought against Custer that he ordered Elliott to his death and abandoned him to fate. Custer knew nothing whatever of Elliott's going. Half an hour after he had gone Custer rode up and asked Clark what had become of Elliott, being anxious to find a sergeant major that had been seen with him. The enmity between Colonel Penteen and Custer, which grew very bitter afterwards, was already rife. Penteen, anxious to lower Custer's prestige, went to Clark several days after it was believed that Elliott and his men were lost, and asked him if he would be willing to make the statement that Custer had knowingly let Elliott go to his doom without trying to save him. Clark refused to have anything to do with the matter.

The troopers were commanded to deploy in all directions, in order not to miss any bodies. A short distance up the river, the naked body of a white woman was found, and nearby was the body of her baby. Both had been stabbed with knives. This woman had been captured during a Cheyenne raid in Colorado near where Sand creek empties into the Arkansas River. In the uproar of the battle they had been killed to prevent their escape.

The story of the death of Elliott and his men was learned after the Indians came in from the warpath. The hostiles who killed them were lead by Left Hand, now the head chief of the Arapahoes, the most eloquent Indian in Oklahoma and a man of ability. Elliott had captured about a dozen boys, and left them in charge of a detail of his men. There were not more than forty warriors in the first party that came in sight. Elliott thought that he was much nearer the main body of troops than he really was, and felt comparatively safe. He fell back to where the captives were with his men and began firing. The advancing Indians knew that hundreds were coming up through the timber along Sergeant Major creek, and came steadily ahead. It was not long before they were joined by reinforcements. The troops had dismounted. The Indians charging like a whirlwind mowed them down as if they had been blades of grass. Not a man escaped. The Indians said that only one warrior was killed and that had Elliott retreated he would have escaped, as they were afraid to follow him.

Custer gave the casualties of the fight as follows: Major Elliott, Captain Hamilton and nineteen enlisted men, killed. Colonel Albert Barnitz, Colonel T. W. Custer, Lieutenant B. Marsh and eleven enlisted men, wounded. Clark, however, insists positively that thirty-two lives were lost in the Elliott disaster.

The expedition under Sheridan and Custer never came within good striking distance of the hostiles. They were closely pursued and finally surrendered after seeing that fight was hopeless. They brought in with them a number of white captives. The most desperate hostiles were imprisoned at Fort Hayes, where a number were killed in an attempt to escape.

It has been many a year since Ben Clark smelled the smoke of battle. He was the only scout of the Washita campaign who was retained in the service. This was due to the friendship of Sheridan, who gave him the title of interpreter and scout to be stationed at Camp Supply. He remained there until October 11, 1876, when he was transferred to Fort Reno, where he has been ever since. The scouting business faded away as the years passed and in 1894 Clark's title was changed to interpreter and trainmaster. He was born fifty-six years ago in St. Louis, Mo., and has been in active service in the United States Army since September 5, 1868.

Will sell my line of Mens and Boys clothing at cost for cash. My line of Hoods and Fascinators is complete and will sell at a close price for cash.—G.W.Hodges

Beaty pays highest market price for hides, furs, butter and eggs.

Overcoats just received at Beaty's. Quality and prices right!

For anything you may need in the drug line, call at the Parrish drug store. You will be waited on by a registered druggist.

Go to Thurmond Bros. for groceries at cost. Cash only goes.

Dry hides are now bringing a good figure, and if you have hides, furs or pelts it will pay you to see Joe Miller who is paying highest market prices for them.

You don't have to wait for the railroad to get a nice Christmas or New Year's present. Just call at Beaty's and see their Christmas goods at railroad prices.

Those wagon scales at Cox's mill are dandies, and only 10c a draft.

Christmas goods just received and being opened at L.A. Beaty's. Largest and nicest selected stock ever been in Cheyenne.

Ladies, call and see those up-to-date ladies', misses' and children's' hats, at Mrs. L.A. Beaty's.

Have your physicians' prescriptions and family receipts filled at Beaty's by a competent druggist.

Nuts, candy, fruit, at post office.

If you want chewing tobacco at cost, go to Thurmond Bros. for it. They have a large assortment.

Go to Turner & Ernest for cash bargains.

See those baby cloaks at Beaty's. They are beauties, and prices are right, 10 per cent above cost.

Best flour at $2.25 a hundred at Parrish store.

The bargains in the grocery department of Thurmond Bros. are going rapidly. Hurry up if you want a bargain.

Oh my! Did you see those new dishes and glass ware at L.A. Beaty's? they are the stuff, and the price is right.

We have new stoves in our room and also in Miss Cann's.

There is plenty of wood now for the school and we have the window lights in for which we are thankful.

We have the school ground cleaned off and it looks quite neat and clean.

Miss Cann has returned from "courtin" trip and is at her post.

The literary will meet Friday night. Everybody is requested to come early as the exercises will begin as soon as the house is filled.

The singers Friday will be accompanied by part of the Band.

We are real glad to say that we are well pleased to entertain company now we have a nice warm room with the walls covered with drawings of each pupil. It has been remarked that our school room is quite artistic.

The organ from the church house is being used in our school.

Mrs. Owensby filled Miss Cann's place with credit.

Examination's are on the last of this week and vacation is one week.

Our teacher promises us a large medal contest next summer.

There were not many teachers in attendance at the teachers meeting last Saturday. Several topics were discussed, in the afternoon, however. D.W. Tracy read an able paper on Compulsory Education; J.R. Johnson's paper on "The Teachers as a "Factor in Society" was instructive; Prof. J.B. Tracy handled the subject "Corporal Punishment" entertainingly; Prof. T.E. Jones and E.E. Tracy enlivened the occasion with instructive extempore talks. There will not be another teachers meeting until spring.

Local and Personal Items

Born on Tuesday last to Sheriff Thompson and wife, a daughter.

Miss Lucy Rodgers who has just completed her three months term of school on Nine mile creek, was visiting friends here Wednesday.

A Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to all our readers.

Calvin Rosser reports that the Choctaw surveyors are camped about one mile north and four miles west of Berlin.

George Banks and S. Alexander came in from Sweetwater yesterday.

The grip has made its annual call here and is doing a big business, if not a satisfactory one.

For Sale—Sixty five head of cattle. Some extra good milk cows in the bunch. Will sell all or part. F.E. Herring

We are informed by the County Superintendent that all the schools in the county, with three or four exceptions, will close today till spring.

Mr. C. Robertson and son of Iowa Park, Texas, arrived in town this evening, and will begin at once building on his residence.

M. J. Houston is having some improvements made on his claim near town. Mr. J.M. Moffett and son are the builders.

Quiet a number of prospectors in this neighborhood now, and they report more coming. Nearly 75 claims have been taken around Sweetwater in the last 30 days.

Dr. R.W. Cushman of Vernon, Texas has located in Sweetwater, and will make this his future home. He comes well recommended by those who know him as a physician and surgeon.

Mr. Ragsdale has about completed his new residence, which adds very materially to the looks of his ranch.

The telephone line from Miami to Sweetwater is completed, but owing to a defect in Mr. Sam McCord's phone we are unable to communicate with our friends on the Santa Fe.

Mr. Sam Ashley of Vernon, Texas was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. McCord this week. He says Tom Waggoner has bought nearly the south half of Wilbarger County and that a number of his neighbors are thinking of coming to Sweetwater. Miss Ella Davis was also visiting McCord's family Saturday and Sunday.

Mill Lilly Clark is teaching Mr. J.F. Bradley's children at his ranch on Sweetwater Creek. Mr. W.B. Woods' brother and wife, who have been visiting her, returned to their home on White Shield Tuesday.

Mr. Geo Coburn, Westley and Jack Clark, were in town Tuesday.

J.O. Kelly was trading in Sweetwater Tuesday.

There will be a Christmas tree at Sweetwater School. Everybody invited. Singing every Sunday evening at 2 p.m.

Today, at 3 o'clock, the jury brought in a verdict against Harry Hamilton of murder in the first degree, and fixed the penalty at imprisonment for life. Hamilton, who is a cattleman of Day County, shot and killed Ira Cooper, another cattleman, August 21, at a round-up held at Hamilton's place, and claimed he did it because he believed Cooper had come to the round-up to kill him.

Hamilton took a change of venue to Garfield County. Afterward, he asked a change of judges, and Judge Irwin was ordered by the Supreme Court to try the case. Charles Swindell, county attorney of Day County, J.E. Hoover of Canadian, Texas, and George Rush of Enid prosecuted. The defense was conducted by Temple Houston and W.S. Denton.

From Governor Barnes' report we learn that Roger Mills County is located in the extreme west of Oklahoma; has an area of 757,000 acres; population 2,262; taxable valuation $679,538; county bonded debt, $9,450.00; county tax levy 17.5 mills; number of school districts, 29; number of school children 886; school land in county, 264 quarter sections; government land subject to homestead entry, 182,120 acres; county seat, Cheyenne; other leading towns, Berlin; principal occupation of the people, stock raising; products, stock feed and cattle.

Live Stock for Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians

With the exception of a very small number, these Indians do not have such live stock as cattle, sheep, and hogs. Yet, Oklahoma is a stock raising country, and these Indians have some of the best land of the country for stock raising for they have generally chosen land along the streams where there is water and shelter for stock. Many persons interested in the welfare of the Indians have recommended live stock raising, and especially cattle as the most essential, in order to put these Indians in the way of self support.

One of the resolutions of the convention of the Indian workers at Geary was to this effect: That greater encouragement should be offered to them by the government to get them started in the various forms of live stock raising. This action by the Indian workers in Oklahoma seems to be favorably received by the board of Indian commissioners—their secretary Hon Merrill E. Gates, saying: "I am glad to note that your conference emphasizes the need of increasing the amounts of live stock cared for by the Indians, and of instructing them along the line of proper care for live stock." Maj. A.E. Woodson, their retiring agent, who has been with them for six years, says: "The money heretofore largely appropriated for rations should in my opinion be expended for breeding stock, such as cattle, sheep, hogs, etc., and issued to such deserving Indians as indicate a willingness and disposition to keep and properly care for the same."

Hon. D.T. Flynn, delegate to congress for Oklahoma, likewise says, in reply to a letter to him on the subject: "I note what you say about securing cattle for the Cheyenne Indians and am in hearty accord with the proposition. If possible I will endeavor to have it carried out this winter."

That the Cheyenne and Arapahoe's of Oklahoma may be gradually made self-supporting would be a blessing, not alone to the Indians themselves, but to the white settlers living among them, who under present conditions are called upon to bear many extra burdens. Live stock raising in connection with farming seems to offer the best solution of the question of self-support for them.—D.A. Sanford

The justice court had considerable business to transact with a number of citizens who became too much enthused Christmas day.

The Christmas tree attracted a large number of folks Monday night and a good time was had.

Miss Sallie Taylor is visiting Mrs. Slane this week.

Miss Rebecca Wilson is visiting the family of W.W. Anderson.

On Wednesday night of last week Mr. Kirk directed a lot of horses to be fed from some shelled corn which had accidently become mixed with castor beans. The horses belonged to his son Frank. They were in the stables at the fairgrounds. On Tuesday (sic) a number of the horses became sick and on Saturday and Sunday nine died. These horses were worth $35 each, so that the loss is serious one.—Enid Democrat
